

I have found the Weather and Traffic channels as well as all the music and program channels a real value to me. I purchased a car with XM radio on it and realized its value within 30 minutes after leaving the car lot.

I am against all the moral filth that is allowed on our airways today - whether it be radio or television; but when I complain about these degenerate programs - the official answer I usually get is that they are paid subscription programs and therefore you have the right to watch or not to watch -- subscribe or not to subscribe. Well the current issue with the weather and traffic programming on XM should be afforded the same rationale. It is a subscription product and I ELECT to SUBSCRIBE. If the NAB doesn't want to subscribe that is their choice.
